em war, or in their severity towards the ministry during that war?

What democrat in our country ever censured Mr. Fox, whose speeches they published and praised for his hostility to the war against France, both before and after it commencement?

And, in more recent instances, who censured lord Grenville, Mr. Baring, or Mr. Brougham, for their attack on their own ministry in the questions between us and Great Britain?

Base, indeed, and worthy only of being the slaves of a tyrant, must be those men who would so far degrade our national character, as to contend that we are unable to hear both sides of the question without hazard. If, as these people pretend, our arguments and our remarks are proofs of our devotion to another nation, and of our country, why not expose us to contempt and execration by publishing our essays? Are the people not as capable of judging as these venal editors?

But there is another class of people who are entitled to more respect, and who enquire, what is the benefit derived to our country, by exhibiting the unsoundness of the principles of our own administration pending a controversy between us and foreign nations?

We answer, our government, like that of Great Britain, is a government of opinion, that opinion when once well ascertained ought to and must govern our rulers; this is the very foundation of a free government. But how is this opinion to be formed or to be known? A member of Congress does not correspond with ten persons out of fifty thousand of his constituents. It will be said that he carries with him their sentiments, but suppose a question arises like this of Mr. Jackson, after he leaves home, how is he to know the public feeling?—— We answer— Through the medium of the press—that palladium of our rights. Is all the zeal which we have displayed heretofore in favor of the liberty of the press a mere pretension? And shall we renounce its privileges at the very moment when alone they become important! In times of peace and quiet, it is very immaterial what the press does or does not inculcate; but in times of danger and turbulence its value is felt: shall it be, then, restained when it is most wanted? Shall we be permitted to discuss who shall or shall not be constables or clerks in a petty village, and be denied the discussion whether our country, our lives, and our fortune shall be put in jeopardy by an unnecessary war?

This doctrine of the liberty of the press is strangely managed. When the public papers in the case of the Chesapeake, and of the first unfair and false promulgation of the pretended insult of Mr. Jackson, took side with the government, we were then told they were the vox dei, and not to be resisted. "The people have willed it," said the National Intellegencer, "and it must not be opposed." But when these same public presses, recovering from the panic and the effect of misdirected passions, began to express a different opinion, they were denounced. The sentiments of more sober thought were declared to be the offspring of seditious opinions.

The motives of the foregoing writings were these—It was believed that there was a manifest disposition to bring a rupture with Great Britain; it was perceived that the documents furnished no new and no plausible occasion for it; it was known that our members of congress left their respective states before this state of things was understood, and it was deemed important to let them know in what light these despatches, and the late conduct of our government, were viewed here. It was found, moreover, that the dismissal of Mr. Jackson might be followed by a declaration of war against Great Britain, and that the best mode of avoiding such a calamity, would be by uniting the people and the legislatures of there states, the most opposed to such a disastrous measure, in legal and constitutional means of averting it. It was, and it is still hoped, that if petitions should be presented at the foot of Mr. Madison's throne, he may revoke his determination as to the rejection of the envoy of his Britannic majesty. It is also hoped that Great Britain, notwithstanding the rejection of her minister on frivolous pretences, which is the usual prelude to war, will yet be diverted from adopting, as a precautionary step, the seizure of our vessels and property, an event which would certainly lead to a war, much to be deplored on both sides.

The only hope entertained by the writer of this article is derived from the belief that Great Britain understands the policy of our cabinet—that while their feelings and wishes are all on the side of France, they do not choose to hazard the popularity by an unjust and unfounded war against G. Britain—that a majority of the Eastern states, and two fifths of the others, are opposed to a war on such flimsy grounds as have been yet brought forward, and so long as much deeper, and more aggravated wrongs wholly unatoned for by France.

We hope she knows farther, and we are sure she estimates more seriously the great interests of liberty—that the preservation of America from the grasp of France, is vastly more important than any smaller consideration, and that much is to be endured rather than to suffer such an event to take place.

She will not, we are persuaded, permit herself to mistake the temporary policy of the democratic party, for the real interest and feelings of the American people. She will recollect that Great Britain had her long Parliaments and her Cromwells, and France her Robespierres and Marats, but that such ephemeral appearances are no indication of the general course of national policy.

It is hoped and believed that the promise made by the writer has been in some measure fulfilled. That it has been shewn that we had a right to expect such a negociation and such an issue from Mr. Madison's former character.

That the arrangement of Mr. Erskine was concluded, mala fide, without demanding his powers, knowing that such as he did exhibit were violated, and accompanied with such affrontive expressions as rendered it certain it would not be accepted.

That Mr. Jackson is chargeable with no insulting expressions which we can discern: with no indecorum towards our cabinet, but that the most harsh and indecorous language has been adopted towards him by our secretary of state.

That the British minister and British government have both been charged with the most improper conduct in this late negociation, without, as far as we can discern, the slightest evidence.

On the contrary, that the most injurious conduct and the most insulting insinuations from France, have been wholly overlooked.

We owe an apology to the public for the very incorrect form in which these ideas are conveyed. It has been our endeavor to present a perspicuous view of the subject, rather than to exhibit it in an enticing dress. We are aware that many imperfections and inaccuracies will be found in the style, but they have arisen from the strong desire which was felt to present this interesting subject at an early moment to the public.

Alexandria Daily Gazette.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27.

The following are the observations made by Mr. Cox, in the House of Representatives, in the debate on the Rules and Orders of the House. They are now published as delivered, to correct mistatements.

MR. CHAIRMAN,

As there has been so many opinions expressed on this rule, and perhaps none of them exactly according with mine, I will try to give my opinion also—in a few remarks on the subject.

And I will assure the committee, that they shall be but few, so that if I weary them it shall not be with a long speech.

Sir, who that calls himself a republican will deny that a majority in a deliberative body like this, on whom responsibility does, and of right ought to rest, should not also govern.

In order to explain my ideas on the subject, I will put a case, sir; supposing myself to have been here, say some four or five months, deputed and authorized by my fellow-citizens, to make laws for them; on my return home, I am soon informed that the laws or a copy of them, have got there before me, and that the sovereign people have assembled, I will suppose previous to, and preparatory for another election. I am summoned to attend, or some of my friends advise me to go. I take the advice, and when I have arrived, behold a great number of people have assembled, and organized themselves to deliberate on the laws, (as they most certainly have an undoubted right to do) having their president or chairman, or as it is sometimes said, called major or colonel such an one to the chair—a clerk or secretary thosen—I am first saluted by the said chairman, it may be in a rough manner, with a copy of those laws—hear my defence.

I hope, fellow cititizens, that you do not condemn them all in gross. O no, but here is one a most iniquitous & mischievous one, what do you say to that? Say, why I say gentlemen, that I perfectly agree with you in opinion, and if I had the journals of the house to which I belong, and which I think ought to have accompanied these laws, I could from those journals convince you, that I opposed that bill in every stage of its passage, I raised my feeble voice against it; and if the majority would but have listened to my strong reasoning on the subject, I think they would have been convinced of the evil of their ways; and it may be would have mended them: but they would not attend—they voted me down. Certainly, says the chairman, if this is the case you are innocent; and so they say all; and then I am cleared. So far for responsibility.

I say then, who denies that a majority ought to govern. If therefore, after being tired, worn down with long speeches, it may be argument, and it may be mere speeches without argument: be that as it may—the previous question is called for by one fifth of the members present, say as the rule now stands, say one third if you please. However, I shall not make a motion to that effect.

Well, sir, if the question is put who decides? A majority. If they say that the main question shall not be now put, the debate goes on and the business progresses as if it had not been put—but if they say that the necessity of the case requires a decision, I am so much of a republican, or think myself so, that I will conform thereto. I hope therefore, that the rule will be adopted by the committee, and that it will be agreed to by the house—but whether in its present form, altered or amended, as may possibly be done. But, sir, I do not believe that all alteration are amendments, and if the rule is disagreed to so that it is done by a fair majority I will most cordially acquiesce therein—And then, sir, one gentleman may get up and begin his speech in the morning and talk all day; that is, as long as he can see to read his notes—And then the boys may be called in, the lamps and candles lighted, this hall illuminated, another gentleman may get up and speak all night. I will summon all the power of patience that I possess and sit and hear them—I say hear them, because I am blest with the sense of hearing, and I do not sleep at my post.—But one thing I wish; that is, that gentlemen will not rise to speak before they have something to say, and I hope also that they will stop when they have done. I believe I will take the advice myself.

Congress of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 26.

[Taken for the Alexandria Gazette.]

[This day agreeably to the new rule lately adopted, is set apart for considering bills and reports originating on petitions.]

The house went into committee of the whole on the bill extending the right of suffrage in the county of Madison, Mississippi territory. Mr. Alston in the chair.—The bill passed with amendments in committee, and was taken up and passed to a third reading in the house.

The bill for the relief of Daniel Shaddock was taken up and passed to a third reading.

The bill originating on the petition of Joseph J. Dashiell was taken up and passed to a third reading.

☞ CHARITY SERMON.

JUST RECEIVED,

For sale cheap by JAMES KENNEDY, Sen. King-street,

The following highly valuable Medicines,

Price 3 dollars per bottle.

Dr. Jebb's Nature's Restorative,

A BALSAMIC CORDIAL.

THIS cordial so justly celebrated throughout Great-Britain and the continent of Europe, for its superior efficacy in the curing all disorders excited by nervous irritability, as well as in complaints of complete debility, whether arising from irregularities of living, long continued residence in warm climates intemperate pursuits of excessive pleasures or that destructive habit of inconsiderate youth which brings on so prematurely the infirmities of old age.

In removing pulmonary affections, asthmas and all disorders of the lungs, it is the most powerful remedy ever yet found, and the relief it has afforded even in the last stage of consumptions, is without a parallel; with regard to its efficacy in this baneful, and unfortunately the prevailing disorder in this country (consumption) its superiority is such as to have supplanted every other medicine.

Those who in advanced life feel the consequences of youthful excess, will find themselves restored to health and strength, and all those melancholy symptoms removed, which are the general effects of such causes.

In short, animated by the uniform success this invaluable cordial has experienced in Europe, the thousands it has renovated, when bending under the pressure of nervous, consumptive or hypochondriacal disorders (many attested proofs of which from eminently distinguished persons in this quarter of the globe, are now in the possession of the proprietor here, some few of which are herein published have determined the introduction of it into this continent, where its efficacies must soon become so prized as to make it considered a beneficent remedy not to be dispensed with by those who are anxious to preserve or acquire their health.

The chief ingredient of this cordial is a plant whose rare and precious salutary virtues were well known to the Arabians during the 8th and 9th centuries, when that people shone conspicuous over all the nations of the world for their learning and skill in eradicating baneful diseases incident to the human frame, renovating infirmity to vigor, and restoring the sickly to sound and rosy health, and which, as known at this time by their descendants, and used and experienced as the most sovereign remedy for decayed constitutions, and every species of nervous disorders. This celebrated restorative plant has also been highly estimated for ages past, amongst the most enlightened nations of Greece, and considered by those wise inhabitants as one of the first of their blessings.

This cordial is also rich and fine in flavor most grateful to the palate, and the most enlivening to the spirits of any yet offered to the public.

inkerton's Collection of Voyages and Travels,

Forming a complete History of the Origin and Progress of Discovery by Sea and Land, from the most authentic Sources

THE first number of this valuable Work is just come to hand and is ready for inspection at the store of the subscriber, in King-street, and with Mr. Triplet, at the coffee-house.

Fully aware of the impositions that have been practised upon the public by strangers soliciting subscriptions from distant places; the Editors invite their examination of a Work perhaps the most useful, entertaining as well as extensive in its kind that has ever been undertaken in any country. And they flatter themselves that the American will by no means shrink from a comparison with the London edition, tho' offered at six dollars per Vol. less.

This number may be considered as a fair specimen of the execution of the work, and will be left a short time for examination, before the 2d number is put to press. After this the subscription will be raised to $2 25 each number; and but a few more copies printed than are sufficient to supply the subscribers, that the early patrons of this valuable Work may have a decided advantage—subsequent applications may therefore come too late.

It is also the intention of the Editor to annex to the last number a complete list of names of the subscribers as the patrons and encouragers of useful knowledge, the arts and literature of the United States.

Subscriptions are received by the subscriber.
